- There was an antiaircraft gun emplacement, three or four groups of three guns each, in the Bolshaya suburb of LENIN GRAD (30°17'E/59°59'N), on an open site north of the "Red October" Plant. The size and caliber of the runs were similar to the German 88-mm antiaircraft guns.
- Trucks with field generators one some type of sound detector were observed near the gun emplacements. The sound detector about half way between the German accustic sets and a smaller version of the Euerzburg set. It was in shape of a wire basket similar to the Wuerzburg set.

Comment: Report confirmed previous information on an antiaircraft oun emplacement near the Red October Plante 25X1 It is noteworthy that all the antiaircraft artillery batteries so far observed to be employed in the PVO (Air defense) system consisted of three guns each. Radar locating equipment was also frequently observed and likened to former German sets, such as the Mannheims burg, Ansbach, and Frankfurt sets. That such sets are actually produced in the Soviet Union is revealed by previously received reports on the LENINGRAD Radar Plant corresponding plants in PAVSHINO-KHASNOGORSK.
